Romans In A New World

The ancient Romans haunted the Spanish conquest of the New World, often as passionately rejected models. While the conquistadors challenged the reputation of Romans for incomparable military genius and daring, they also considered Rome an exemplar of imperialistic motives and behavior fit for Christians to follow and as a yardstick against which to measure

Romans in a New World - University of Michigan Press

Romans in a New World shows how the ancient Romans haunted the Spanish conquest of the New World, more often than not as passionately rejected models. While the conquistadors themselves and their publicists challenged the reputations of the Romans for incomparable military genius and daring, Spanish critics of the conquest launched a concerted assault upon two other prominent uses of ancient Rome as a model: as an exemplar of imperialistic motives and behavior fit for Christians to follow ...

Engraved in Latin in the frontispiece of El escudo de armas de Mexico (1746), this story shows that Iberians and their descendants understood their actions in the New World as both following in the footsteps of Rome and "topping off" Rome. Luper's Romans in a New World explores in fascinating detail the politics of these two interwoven themes.

Romans 12 as context for Paul's words in Romans 13 Paul's admonitions in 13:1-7 should be read as a continuation of his exhortations in chapter 12. Paul expects the attitudes and actions that are to typify believers' relationships with their fellow believers should also typify their dealings with the governing authorities.

Commentary: Digging into Paul's view on God and government ...

In Romans 8, the apostle Paul is teaching believers that their new life in Jesus Christ is solidly founded on God's promises and plans for His children. The first promise Paul touches on is that of future glory: "I consider our present sufferings insignificant compared to the glory that will soon be revealed to us" (Romans 8:18, GW).
